The Argentine Bugaboo.

Barnum said the American people sidering the amount of space devoted to the imagined menace of Argentine corn, we presume that some one or some class are intent on giving us a panic makers they have not yet been full meal of foolishness. Whatever able to duplicate the winter expert at may be said of the present tariff, it a matter of fact, history shows that farmer than any previous one which which would suit everybody, or one which would please any one man, rebeen made almost wholly by and for the manufacturers alone. So it's pretty safe that they are the very parties behind this Argentine corn bugaboo, as naturally not having been able to hold their former grasp and control of congress and the making of tariffs wholly satisfactorily to themselves, they must now endeavor to scare the farmer, with the hope of preventing further changes in the tariff which will bring more natural benefits to him, and possibly secure langes restoring, at le part of their lost heritage. Experts who have been all over the Argentine field tell us authoritatively that practically every possible corn growing area has been already utilized. The total corn production of Argentine is now a little less than five Iowa counties, and as their own population thickens up they will naturally have to consume more at home, which will probably reduce their exports to less American corn, and if it fills any market in this country, it will be where inferior corn can be used, and that inferior corn can
